- Demonstrate the ability to manage and work in multicultural teams.

Judgement and approach
- Demonstrate the ability to make assessments in international marketing, informed by relevant disciplinary, social and ethical issues.

Course content
During the larger part of the course the class will be focusing on business-to-consumer marketing (B2C). Towards the end of the course, business-to-business marketing (B2B) will also be introduced. The course focuses, specifically, how the knowledge and ‘tool-boxes’ from these two perspectives apply to international marketing situations, such as international product launches, international distribution/retail networks and international brand management.

Course design
The course is conducted through a mix of lectures and student lead seminars. The lectures are meant to explain some of the more difficult concepts from the literature, and provide context as well as structure. Providing context is achieved by using examples and cases from real events in companies, and by inviting a number of guest speakers from relevant companies with positions that are crucial to the companies’ marketing functions. The seminars are student lead, albeit the student presentations are all overseen and graded (pass/fail) by a teacher. The aim of the seminars is to facilitate student learning by having the students engage with the content of the literature - analyzing and explaining the connections between the case and the relevant literature.

Assessment
See appendix including examination sessions. (Will be attached to the curriculum automatically in the system).

Subcourses that are part of this course can be found in an appendix at the end of this document.
