Module 1: The Societal Conditions of Communication (7.5 credits)
The module aims to describe and interrogate communication processes and media in a societal context. Discussions in the module address how the subject of media and communication studies helps us to understand societal development. Furthermore, communication and media are addressed in terms of ideology, structure, institutions, conditions, ethics and societal atmosphere.

Module 2: Media Supply (7.5 credits)
The aim of the module is to provide students with a basic understanding of media content (media texts and images) and its significance. Among the questions addressed are the reasons for a certain type of media supply, focusing on the principles of newsworthiness and gatekeeping processes within news media. The module also applies different perspectives on media supply and the role of media in society, for example a gender perspective.

Module 3: Media Use in Everyday Life (7.5 credits)
This module places the focus on the user. Media consumption, the concept of the audience and audience surveys are discussed in the context of different research traditions. Among the concepts addressed are theories of cultivation, uses and gratification and reception analysis. The module poses questions about who uses which media, why and in what way. Furthermore, it examines what kind of knowledge is generated by different research methods. Issues of the theory of science are addressed in connection with different audience perspectives.

Module 4: Communication and Interaction (7.5 credits)
The module deals with communication processes at the levels of organisations, groups and individuals from the perspective of theories of social psychology and social interaction. Furthermore, processes of control and planning of communication processes at different levels are discussed and the complexity and socio-psychological nature of communication are interrogated.

Course design

The aim of the course is to provide students with general and current knowledge and understanding of the research areas, theories, concepts and analysis methods of Media and Communication Studies. A further aim is to enable students to develop a critical awareness and ability to reflect on media and communication issues in society for organisations and individuals, and to develop knowledge of how to analyse simple media and communication issues.

On each course module, there is one or more compulsory seminars that are carried out in groups. In addition, there is also a compulsory element of information retrieval and academic honesty.

Unless there are valid reasons to the contrary, compulsory participation is required in seminars. Students who have been unable to participate due to circumstances such as accidents or sudden illness will be offered the opportunity to compensate for or re-take compulsory components. This also applies to students who have been absent because of duties as an elected student representative.

Assessment

Each course module is examined individually by a grade-determining written assignment, either a take-home exam or a sit-down exam.

The course includes opportunities for assessment at a first examination, a re-sit close to the first examination and a second re-sit for courses that have ended during that school year. Two further re-examinations on the same course content are offered within a year of the end of the course. After this, further re-examination opportunities are offered but in accordance with the current course syllabus.

In addition to the first examination, a re-examination is organised once per semester and once per year. A total of five examinations are available for one and the same assessed component, in accordance with the Higher Education Ordinance Chapter 6 Section 21.

The examiner, in consultation with Disability Support Services, may deviate from the regular form of examination in order to provide a permanently disabled student with a form of examination equivalent to that of a student without a disability.

Subcourses that are part of this course can be found in an appendix at the end of this document.
