Learning outcomes

On completion of the course the student shall

Knowledge and understanding

- be able to account for the dominant research currents of the subject of their choice and place their research in a wider scholarly context

Competence and skills

- be able to discern, delimit and formulate a problem linked to a research assignment in a subject of their choice
- be able to analyse and interpret source material of relevance to their studies
- be able to argue a position supported by secondary literature used and presented in a scholarly correct fashion and with relevant linguistic or philological terminology
- be able to plan, structure, carry out and report a research project on a subject of their choice
- be able to present insights acquired through independent study of an independently identified problem in a subject of their choice in a clear, logical, correct and stylistically appropriate manner
- be able to independently search for and evaluate information of relevance to the subject of their choice and demonstrate a good command of the apparatus of scholarly writing

Judgement and approach

- be able to identify different theoretical approaches in scholarly studies and evaluate the significance of each approach for the execution and results of the research project
- be able to assess their own texts and those of others with regard to the validity of the argumentation, the clarity and logical structure of the presentation and the relationship between stated purpose and achieved results
- be able to assess the potential and limitations of research methodology and be able to judge the need for further knowledge, from both a personal and a social perspective.

Course content

In this course the student is to examine and analyse a research assignment in a subject of his or her choice independently but with the aid of a supervisor. The assignment is chosen in consultation with the supervisor and is presented in a degree project, approximately 15-20 000 words in length. With the aid of handbooks in academic writing, the student consolidates his or her ability to deal with primary and secondary sources according to the standards of scholarship. These standards comprise the fair representation of previous research, correct and efficient citation, and the correct use of established systems for references and bibliographies. During the course the student develops his or her ability to account for complex phenomena in well-written and stylistically appropriate prose.

Course design

Teaching consists of individual supervision and seminars. Attendance is compulsory for defence seminars in the student's specialisation.

Assessment

Assessment is based on the degree thesis which the student submits and defends at a seminar. A critical review of the thesis of another student is also included in the assessment.

Passed degree projects at the Faculties of Humanities and Theology can be registered in the LUP Student Papers database if the student so wishes. The student is responsible for uploading the passed degree project as a PDF file in LUP student papers.

Subcourses that are part of this course can be found in an appendix at the end of this document.
