Learning outcomes

On completion of the course, students shall demonstrate

Knowledge and understanding

- an understanding of different normative frameworks that have been developed for restraining or legitimizing the use of force in international politics

Competence and skills

- the ability to apply different normative frameworks to real cases of war and peace in international politics, and to compare and reflect on their relevance

- the ability to present analysis in written and oral form that corresponds to academic standards

- the ability to take responsibility for their learning process and contribute to a collective learning environment.

Course content

Under what conditions is the use of force permissible? This course provides a historical and critical overview of attempts to restrain and legitimize the use of force in international politics from the early modern period to the present day. The course opens with a broad survey of the main traditions in the ethics of war in the history of political and legal thought, and then tries to assess their contemporary relevance against the backdrop of current changes in the practice of warfare. Given that traditional positions are believed to be increasingly irrelevant, the third part of the course addresses alternative modes of thinking in ethical terms about war and peace in the present.

Course design

The course consists of a series lectures and seminars. Attendance at seminars is mandatory. Students who miss a seminar will have to make up for their absence by an assignment.

Assessment

Assessment is based on active participation in seminars and group work, and on an individually written course paper. Re-examination is offered after the end of the course. If necessary, a second re-examination is arranged at a later date.

Subcourses that are part of this course can be found in an appendix at the end of this document.

Grades

Marking scale: Fail, E, D, C, B, A.

The grades awarded are A, B, C, D, E or Fail. The highest grade is A and the lowest passing grade is E. The grade for a non-passing result is Fail. The student's performance is assessed with reference to the learning outcomes of the course. For the grade of E the student must show acceptable results. For the grade of D the student must show satisfactory results. For the grade of C the student must show good results. For the grade of B the student must show very good results. For the grade of A the student must show excellent results. For the grade of Fail the student must have shown unacceptable results. At the start of the course students are informed about the learning outcomes stated in the syllabus, and about the grading scale and how it is applied in the course.
