Knowledge and understanding

- account for and clarify problems and discussions within current research and debate about anthropology through conceptions of human nature, problems and aims
- account for fields in which research within ethics, philosophy of religion and systematic theology provides important contributions to anthropology

Competence and skills

- with a certain degree of independence reflect on and critically discuss contexts and problems in current anthropology
- analyse main themes within anthropology in oral and written presentations
- find, assess and critically interpret information required to provide constructive contributions to research and debate about anthropology
- use theories and methods that are current within studies in faith and world views to analyse a chosen issue in writing

Judgement and approach

- critically assess different theories within ethics, philosophy of religion and systematic theology in current debates relating to anthropology within church and society, focusing on gender, power and ethnicity
- take a position on issues about conceptions of human nature, problems and aims with well-supported arguments

Course content

The course provides students with a specialisation within studies in faith and world views in which the view of the nature and value of human beings- anthropology- is addressed from perspectives of ethics, philosophy of religion and systematic theology. The view of humanity (anthropology) is considered from three different aspects: conceptions about the nature and value of human beings, conceptions about evil, sin and suffering, and conceptions about the aim and future of humanity.

Emphasis is placed on issues of theory and method, the significance of aspects of gender, power and ethnicity, and the impact of perspectives of ethics, philosophy of religion and systematic theology on the processing of the issues.

The course is concluded with a specialisation in an individually chosen theme/issue within anthropology, in which students will practise conducting research, making individual assessments and providing well-supported contributions to ongoing discussion within higher education, church and society.

Course design

The teaching consists of lectures and approximately 5 seminars. Students are expected to make oral and written presentations in the context of the seminars.

Participation in at least 80 % of the seminars is compulsory unless there are special grounds. Students who have been unable to participate due to circumstances such as accidents or sudden illness will be offered the opportunity to compensate for or re-take compulsory components. This also applies to students who have been absent because of duties as an elected student representative. In other cases, there will be no opportunity to compensate for compulsory components.

Assessment

The assessment is based on approximately 5 minor memoranda during the course and a more extensive memorandum of approximately 10-15 pages at the end of the course.

Subcourses that are part of this course can be found in an appendix at the end of this document.

Grades

Marking scale: Fail, Pass, Pass with distinction.

For a grade of Pass, the student must have been awarded this grade on all components. For a grade of Pass with Distinction, the student must have been awarded this grade on the final memorandum.

Entry requirements

To be admitted to the course, students must have passed TLVB31 Studies in Faith and World Views: Level 2 A or the equivalent.
