Kursens innehåll

The course aims at giving the students the experience of working in a development context. It may also serve as a means of gathering material for the forthcoming bachelor's thesis. The course is divided into three 15-credit tracks, and the student has to choose one of these. Two tracks give the opportunity to do a field study or an internship within a development organisation, while the third track, the research overview, is an option for those who choose to remain at Lund University. The three tracks differ as specified below but all include compulsory readings and assignments.

Track 1: Field Work

The track is an opportunity to collect material for the forthcoming thesis for students who are interested in doing field work in developing countries. The student is required to write a field work diary. A limited number of Minor Field Study - scholarships are available at the departments. If the students are willing to fund their own field trip, or seek funding elsewhere this is acceptable.

Track 2: Internship

The internship should be carried out with a development organization of the student's choice. The organization must, however, be cleared by the course convener and the BIDS Programme Coordinator. The internship should last ten weeks of full time work (the full duration of the course). The BIDS programme does not provide the students with internships but will help with letters of introduction. The internship course is separate from the thesis course, but if the host organization allows it, source material obtained through the internship can be used as part of the thesis work.

Track 3: Research Overview

The final option open to the students is to take a literature course. The aim of the course is to allow the students to read some of the classic and contemporary work within their major. The course will be individually designed by the student and the department within which he or she majors. In addition, the course gives the student a chance to study and review academic literature on the topic chosen for the thesis and is also an opportunity to collect secondary data.
