Course content

The course will start off with an introduction into regimes in international law and offer an overall comparison of the trade and migration regimes against the backdrop of economic and human rights parameters. The interest of the states to regulate migration is taken as a vantage point. A central issue running through the course is how the state sovereign entitlement to control immigration could come into conflict with human rights law. The course will include inter alia lectures on the 1951 Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, The Common European Asylum System, The Dublin System, Protection from Refoulement under Article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights, Evidentiary Assessment in Asylum Cases, Children as Asylum-seekers.

Another building block of the course will cover protection of migrant workers who are vulnerable to abusive practices. Lectures belonging to this block will address Trafficking in Human Beings, The Migrant Workers Convention, The Positive Human Rights Obligations under the European Convention on Human Rights, The ILO and the Protection of Migrant Workers. The course will include seminars where students will be required to actively participate. That participation will be essential for the exam preparation. The exam will be in the format of a take home exam, which will include one essay question and three focus questions. To pass the exam students will be required to demonstrate their skills of developing formal legal argumentation. Students are required to analyze case law with regard to the legal questions, the legal arguments and solutions proposed and to show strong analytical skills. In addition, students should demonstrate their understanding of the migration law regime as a whole and to identify the forces affecting the legal regulation of migration.

Course design

The students obtain knowledge and competences as above by individual studies of course literature and other course material, and by taking an active part in lectures and seminars. The students will analyse case law with regard to the legal questions, the legal arguments and solutions proposed, to strengthen their legal analytical skills.

The course will combine lectures, seminars and group work.

Assessment

Examination is in the form of a take-home exam (some 90 percent of the final grade) and active oral participation in seminars as designated by responsible staff (some 10 percent of the final grade).
