Learning outcomes

On completion of the course, the students shall be able to

Knowledge and understanding

- describe how different languages meet the same grammatical needs in different ways
- use theories of production and perception processes to explain similarities and differences between different grammatical constructions and strategies
- explain how the limitations of language users in production and perception processes affect the formulation of an utterance or the structure of a language system
- account for how the view on grammar and its place in linguistics has changed historically

Competence and skills

- illustrate with concrete examples how different parts of grammar interact with each other in a given language
- supported by examples, classify a language typologically, predict other language features, understand how the grammar of a language functions as well as translate language samples to and from the language
- view their native language from a typological perspective
- express themselves in writing using a discourse that is relevant to linguistics and at an appropriate academic level for the task

Judgement and approach

- evaluate different ways to describe and explain grammatical structure based on empirical data
- perceive the typological diversity of the world as part of the richness of humanity's cultural heritage.

Course content

The course contains partly a typological overview of how certain kinds of grammatical constructions are applied in different languages and partly an introduction to different ways to explain this variation as well as how these explanatory models have developed historically. In general, the course content is based on phenomena and empirical observations. ? The subareas that are covered in detail include: relativisation, negation, question word questions, subject and object properties, subordinate clauses and inflection categories.

Course design

Teaching consists of lectures and exercises. A group assignment is included in the course.

Assessment

The assessment is based on the following modules:

Module 2: Grammar - The Mechanics of Language a written invigilated exam, 2 credits (grades: Fail, Pass, Pass with Distinction)

Module 3: Grammar - The Mechanics of Language a written take-home exam 4 credits (grades: Fail, Pass, Pass with Distinction)

The examiner, in consultation with Disability Support Services, may deviate from the regular form of examination in order to provide a permanently disabled student with a form of examination equivalent to that of a student without a disability.
