Learning outcomes

On completion of the course, students shall be able to

Knowledge and understanding

- account for important lines of development in the history of the media with regard to the relation between power and the media
- understand the relationship between power and the media, and use a power perspective to account for concepts such as mediatization, media logic and media systems

Competence and skills

- critically analyse different media systems from a power perspective, historically and in relation to other economic, social, political and cultural changes

- present and discuss in speech and writing different research perspectives on the relation between power and the media

Judgement and approach

- test the applicability and relevance of different media history perspectives on different types of empirical data and issues
- assess and take a position on aspects of media history with regard to gender, class and racialisation

Course content

The course deals with the relationship between power and the media with regard to everything from major societal institutions to the everyday lives of people, using the concept of media systems, among others, and focusing on media relations and dependencies. The module pursues a critical discussion of central concepts such as mediatization, media logic and media strategies in relation to different arenas such as popular culture and the political sphere. The discussion is based on the perspectives gender, class and racialisation, and historical and geographical comparisons.

Course design

The teaching consists of lectures, supervision, seminars and exercises. The assessed seminars (approximately four) are compulsory.

Assessment

The assessment is based partly on active participation in the assessed seminars, and partly on a take-home exam at the end of the course.

The examiner may deviate from the regular form of examination if the student has been granted an alternative form of examination by the Disability Support Services, and if it complies with the learning outcomes of the course.

Subcourses that are part of this course can be found in an appendix at the end of this document.

Grades

Marking scale: Fail, Pass, Pass with distinction.
