Course content

The aim of course is to provide the future psychologist with insight into the work of the psychologist.

The course is divided into three modules:

Module 8:1. Workplace Practice: Practicum, 19 credits.

During the period of the placement, the future psychologist, supervised by a registered psychologist, is expected to practise skills of relevance to the psychological profession. The future psychologist is to have the opportunity to review and discuss advantages, shortcomings and indications for different investigation methods and interventions. Issues of confidentiality and ethical principles of psychological work are to be addressed continuously. Supported by supervision, the future psychologist is to develop an understanding of the personal preconditions for the psychological profession. At the same time, they should have the opportunity to reflect on their own continuing professional development, and on the role of the psychologist in the organisation concerned and in the different group constellations in which the psychologist works. The training is to take place in the context of psychological activity, in which the future psychologist, supported by supervision, is to obtain experiences and knowledge of the societal, organisational and professional settings in which psychologists are active. The placement should be designed so that the future psychologist is enabled to participate in the processing of assignments, thereby becoming familiar with the organisation and regulations of the area of activity. The students are to practise written and oral communication of psychological data and conclusions.

Module 8:2. Literature Review, 2 credits.

During the component, the future psychologist is to write a literature review based on a current issue of relevance to the setting of the future psychologist's placement. The literature review is also to be presented orally to the other course participants.

Module 8:3. Case Assignment, 1 credit.

During the component, the future psychologists are to work in groups on an issue of relevance to the setting of the future psychologist's placement. The aim of the assignment is to use an issue of relevance to the profession to integrate and apply in practice the knowledge and skills acquired during the MSc programme in Psychology.

Course design

The teaching consists of compulsory scheduled lectures and supervision of the literature review and case assignment. The teaching takes place in parallel with the placement at which the teaching is conducted in the form of supervised psychological work. For future psychologists deciding to complete the placement outside Skåne, an individual plan will be designed to describe how the compulsory components and duties are to be handled.

Assessment

Module 8:1. Workplace Practice

For a Pass on this component, the future psychologist must have actively acquired knowledge of the role of the psychologist in the relevant organisation, actively obtained knowledge of the work of the psychologist and been present at the placement within the scope of full-time studies. The learning outcomes associated with this component are assessed by the examiner based on the documentation provided by the placement supervisor. If the student demonstrates unethical behaviour and other serious deficiencies in his or her professional approach, he or she can be failed during an on-going course. In such cases, the course director is to assess if the student possesses relevant knowledge, skills and approaches to be able to redo the placement. If the student is failed, he or she will have one more opportunity to complete the component. The placement must then be completed in its entirety.

Module 8:2. Literature Review

The assessment is based on a written report.

Module 8:3. Case Assignment

The assessment is based on an oral group presentation.

Subcourses that are part of this course can be found in an appendix at the end of this document.

Grades

Marking scale: Fail, Pass.

The grades awarded are Pass or Fail. For a grade of Pass, the student must have attained the learning outcomes stated for the course.

At the start of the course students are informed about the learning outcomes stated in the syllabus, and the grading scale and how it is applied in the course.
