Learning outcomes

On completion of the course, the students shall be able to:

Knowledge and understanding

- account for different forms of rites
- account for the role of the rite in shaping identity and preserving traditions
- account for the significance of the ritual space

Competence and skills

- analyse ritual discourse
- analyse the relationship between the practitioners' and the researchers' models of the rite and relate it to the societal context,

Judgement and approach

- assess the importance of rites from a gender and ethnicity perspective
- distinguish between religious and scientific models.

Course content

The subject of the course is lived religion: traditional and creative rituals. The course expands the study of lived religion by focusing on ritual practice, illustrated by rites from different contexts, e.g. temple rites in Asia, modern goddess rites, the rites of Judaism and Islam, the rites of aboriginal peoples and new age rites. Among the topics addressed are ritual texts, rites as mediation of tradition, iconography and architecture, the creation of new rites in present-day society, and the significance of rites for cultural and social identity.

Course design

The course mainly consists of independent study. Additionally, instruction takes place through lectures and a compulsory final review seminar. Absence may be compensated for with a written assignment in accordance with the lecturer's instructions.

Assessment

The assessment is based on a take-home exam comprising approximately 8-10 pages.

The examiner, in consultation with Disability Support Services, may deviate from the regular form of examination in order to provide a permanently disabled student with a form of examination equivalent to that of a student without a disability.
