Course content

The bachelor thesis is an independent piece of work that addresses issues in the field of Development Studies. The writing of the thesis is guided by a supervisor. Whereas the supervisor provides constructive feedback on the basic structure of the inquiry, the course represents an independent research effort, and responsibility for the final product rests with the authors themselves. The students are also expected to participate in thesis seminars and to scrutinize and discuss another thesis in the field of study. At the start of the course seminars will be arranged offering general information about the thesis writing process.

Course design

The teaching consists of tutorials and seminars, individually or in groups.

Assessment

To complete the course the student must submit a thesis, written in English, as well as defend the thesis in an examination seminar. The student must also participate as an opponent on a thesis written by a fellow student. All students are expected to actively participate in seminars and tutorial sessions.

A possibility for a re-exam will be offered shortly after the first exam opportunity. Moreover, additional opportunities for re-exams will be offered at later dates.

Subcourses that are part of this course can be found in an appendix at the end of this document.
