Kursens innehåll

The course explores the political dimensions of development policies and processes with an emphasis on the global and national levels. We look into governance structures, institutions and power relations shaping current development thought and practice in areas such as poverty, health, the environment and gender. The course pays particular attention to relations between states, international organisations, civil society and private business in international development cooperation. A recurrent theme throughout the course is the intersection between the international human rights framework and development policies in a so-called rights-based approach to development. With regard to the national level, the main themes are democratization and state-building, aligned with questions on what development is and ought to be in those processes. The final paper is an opportunity for the student to engage in further analysis of a development issue raised during the course.

Kursens genomförande

The course combines interactive lectures, where the main themes of the course are introduced and discussed, with student conducted seminars and a final individual course paper.

The seminars contain oral and written student presentations and discussions based on the course literature. The presentations may be group assignments and individual assignments. The seminars also include individual presentations of course paper topics.

Students are assessed on the basis of active participation in lectures and seminars during the first half of the course, and on the basis of the individually authored course paper during the second half of the course.
